Imagine that it's a hot summer day and you have been walking up and down the street while window shopping. You may wish there were something to make your feet feel better. These shoes were invented for just that.

They have a network of heat exchange coils located in their heels. Every time you take a step, you make a compressor start its function, forcing cool air up into the shoe. This means that the more you walk, the cooler your feet can be. But just be careful. Someone wearing these shoes walked so fast that _____.

- ① he got injured by cool air
- ② he will never feel hot again
- ③ his feet felt too hot in summer
- ④ he sweated too much in summer
- ⑤ he forced cool air up into the shoe

(A) Have you ever fallen asleep on the subway and missed your stop? A Japanese inventor made an innovative and weird invention to solve this problem. A Subway-Sleeper is a specially made helmet that looks like one found at a construction site with a plunger attached to it. The plunger is used to attach the helmet to the windows on the train. A text board is placed in front of the helmet so that other passengers will know when to wake you up. _____, you have to ask yourself if relying on the kindness of strangers is really such a good idea.

(B) As people who live on an island nation which has lots of rain, the Japanese are almost (about, as, as, concerned, the, weather) the British. It's no wonder then that they have invented so many different types of umbrellas. From shoe umbrellas to umbrella hats, they've done it all. Then how about this umbrella tie? Its dual function convenience means that you will no longer have to worry about leaving your umbrella on the bus. _____, as a fashion statement, it does leave something to be desired.
