The idea of the wedding ring started with the ancient Hindus. It was not considered to be a symbol of love in the beginning. It was, _____, a sign that a down payment had been given for the woman and that she was no longer available. The ancient Greeks and Romans took the idea of wedding rings from the Hindus and kept the ring as a sign that a young lady was "sold." It was Christian society that gave the ring a different meaning. They adopted the ring around the year 1000 as a sign of fidelity. The ring, a circle with no beginning and no end, also came to symbolize eternity. In some countries, such as Brazil, couples wear rings that have their names inside: the bride has the groom's name on her ring and vice versa.
